Dear readers,

We are delighted to present a “Supplemental Edition” of our journal, which features four articles by authors focusing on the topic of libertarianism and the conflict between Hamas and Israel. This special edition is being published alongside our regular July issue in response to the urgent need for in-depth analysis on the topic.

As an editorial decision, we have opted to create this Supplemental Edition due to the timeliness and significance of the content provided by the authors. While one of the authors already has two articles featured in our July issue, we believe that the inclusion of additional works in the regular journal may compromise the balance and integrity of our publication.

The Supplemental Edition offers a curated collection of works that delve deeper into the relevant and pressing issues surrounding libertarianism and the Hamas-Israel conflict. By publishing these articles separately, we aim to ensure that our readers have access to valuable insights without detracting from the overall thematic coherence of our journal.

The published papers represent the personal views of the authors and are classified as “Position papers”, they are not subject to mandatory peer-to-peer review, and the published views cannot be considered the views of the MEST Journal editors.

This Supplemental Edition serves as a supplement to the July issue of the MEST Journal and was specifically published as an online edition to enhance accessibility for our readers.

We appreciate your understanding and support as we navigate the complexities of academic publishing and strive to provide high-quality content that remains both informative and engaging. Should you have any questions or feedback regarding this Supplemental Edition, please let us know.

Sincerely,

Dr. Zoran Čekerevac
